Rani's Roots

The principal occupation of the villages in Gujarat is agriculture. The villagers have been cultivating crops such as groundnut, cumin, sugarcane, jawar (sorghum), Bajra (millet), rice and wheat. They have also cultivated a myriad of pulses, honey and fruits, like jamun, guava and mangoes for hundreds, if not thousands of years.

Over generations this agricultural economy, combined with rural folklore, with its roots tracing back to Hindu and Jain mythology have become the defining characteristics, of village society in Gujarat. This unique blend of agriculture and tradition, has fostered one of the most sophisticated and balanced pure vegetarian cuisines in the world.

The fact remains that millions of people who live in these region, have been vegetarians for thousand of years. They have had access to diversified farm fresh produce, along with the most exotic spices. This has resulted in a cooking style, many consider the most creative and healthy Indian Cuisine.

Gujarati village cuisine is unique and very different from that found across the rest of India. In fact they say, you go to Bengal for the art and culture, you go to South India for the natural beauty but you go to Gujarat for the food!

At Rani our mission is to recreate for you the wholesome full flavored freshness, experienced daily by the villagers of Gujarat. We focus on using traditional Gujarati cooking techniques, coupled with fresh produce. We only use our own home blended spices, staying true to the unique recipes of Gujarat.

From the delicate fragrance of a light Gujarati Dal, to the explosion of textures and flavors ready and waiting in Aloo Papri Chat, all the way to the unique treat of Undhia, (the true signature dish of village life). All are part of the unique freshness, creativity and flavor of Gujarati cuisine that once experienced, is never forgotten.
